PHE FUNDAMENTAL CONCEPTS OF MODERN PHILOSOPHIC THOUGHT CRITICALLY AND HISTORICALLY CONSIDERED. By RUDGLES ECCRES, Ph. D. Translated by M. Stuart Phelos. Ph. D., professor in Smith college, with an introduction by Noah Porter, president of Yale college. New York: D. Appleton & Co. Washington: F. B. Mohun.

The author of this work presents a critical history of the terms and conceptions which are of special interest in literary and philosophic circles. The object is to furnish the student a clear understanding of terms before they are crystallized into the special and fixed | GEO. HOLMES, meanings. For instance, as to a word that was originally a term of the schools, by what steps of shares could be purchased without forcing transition it proceeded from one meaning to another, until it finally took on a signification which was the opposite of that which it originally bore, or till two correlated terms completely interchanged their significations, more knowledge of more value may be conveyed by the history of a word than by the history of a campaign." The author has limited himself to a few topics, a fact which idds especial value to its just metious.
